

THE NATION AGAINST POLITICIANS ON GUN RIGHTS

The political Left has been using recent mass shootings as rationale to take gun rights from Americans, but Americans are responding with "Second Amendment Sanctuaries."

A gathering: In many meetings of city and county councils across Virginia, overflow crowds showed up to present the case for declaring their communities "Second Amendment Sanctuaries." As of this writing, 95 percent of Virginia's counties have passed those resolutions.

Before the Democratic revolutionists could even take office, towns, cities, and counties across the state declared they would not recognize or enforce any unconstitutional gun laws passed by the General Assembly.

Green as good: As this map illustrates, the Second Amendment Sanctuary movement — marked in green — is strong and growing, as cities, towns, counties, and even entire states push back against the leftist anti-gun agenda.

AP Images

shutterstock.com

The New American magazine
February 18, 2013

The New American magazine
February 17, 2017

File/Culpeper County Sheriff's Office

Gun laws don't apply to the law: Sheriff Scott Jenkins said he would "properly screen and deputize thousands of our law-abiding citizens to protect their constitutional right to own firearms," if needed.

Culp

Guarding the people: Police Chief Loren Culp of Republic, Washington, stood up against unconstitutional gun laws in his state, joining more than half of Washington State's sheriffs in refusing to enforce those laws.